Daily Caller reports that when asked about anti-fascists today, President Trump said: "These people, like the Antifa — they better hope that the opposition to Antifa decides not to mobilize. Because if they do, they're much tougher. Much stronger. Potentially much more violent."

"These people, like the Antifa — they better hope that the opposition to Antifa decides not to mobilize. Because if they do, they're much tougher. Much stronger. Potentially much more violent. And Antifa's going to be in big trouble. But so far they haven't done that and that's a good thing," he continued.

So Sen. Chuck Schumer pushed to kill congressional scrutiny of Facebook.

He also just happens to have gotten more $$ from Facebook employees in 2016 than anyone else in Congress.

nytimes.com/2018/11/14/tec...

A good reminder that the swamp does exist -- and it's bipartisan.

In July, as Facebook's troubles threatened to cost the company billions of dollars in market value, Mr. Schumer confronted Mr. Warner, by then Facebook's most insistent inquisitor in Congress.

Back off, he told Mr. Warner, according to a Facebook employee briefed on Mr. Schumer's intervention. Mr. Warner should be looking for ways to work with Facebook, Mr. Schumer advised, not harm it. Facebook lobbyists were kept abreast of Mr. Schumer's efforts to protect the company, according to the employee.

When it comes to newer developments, fuel modification becomes mature and thick and mixes in with the native vegetation, which during fire storms can add to fire behavior. Terraces and gutters begin to break down, and residual scars from grading begin to fade after a few years.

And when that failed — as the company's stock price plummeted and sparked a consumer backlash — Facebook went on the attack.

While Mr. Zuckerberg conducted a public apology tour in the last year, Ms. Sandberg has overseen an aggressive lobbying campaign to combat Facebook's critics, shift public anger toward rival companies and ward off damaging regulation. Facebook employed a Republican opposition-research firm to discredit activist protesters, in part by linking them to the liberal financier George Soros. It also tapped its business relationships, persuading a Jewish civil rights group to cast some criticism of the company as anti-Semitic.

Replying to @GucciEskobar

Yes sir, indeed it has. We regulate the grid, the water supply, we regulate funfairs, we have to regulate this like any other communications system.

Russia assigned actual military units to this. They said this was "information warfare". Believe them. I do.
